It promises to be an incredibly exciting film experience, telling the story of Elvis Presley's life and career using the heavy dose of style and frenetic energy for Luhrmann's films are famous — think Moulin Rouge! (2001) and Romeo + Juliet (1996). But it makes sense that a blockbuster biopic about Elvis would be bigger than life, because that's exactly what Elvis was during his career. Although he died in 1977 at only 42 years old, his career seems to be five in one. He had successes in the genres of pop, country, gospel and R.T.B. while simultaneously he became known by future generations as "The King of Rock and Roll." The song was For one of the great composition teams of all time: Jerry Lieber and Mike Stoller. They were only 19 years when they wrote the song in 1952 for Big Mama Thornton, whose increased version of the song left in February 1953. His version was an applied one, and made the song be famous. Many artists recorded the song in the following years, but in 1956 Elvis gave the version a chance, but he never considered it until he heard the version of Freddie Bell and the Bellboys, according to Lieber and Stoller. Hilariously, the composers would not have so much fond of Elvis's version "Mike Stoller said later that" he was singing to a man. "And he was singing to a dog. Elvis and his band during the trials for his appearance in the Milton Berle show in 1956. Photo Cortesé: Michael Ochs Archives/Getty Images, however, Elvis's version would be the one that would become a touchstone in the history of the American music. And even if Elvis's version does not contain The same shock of Thornton's version, captures Elvis in his best rockabilly. The first thing you hear in the song is his voice, as if he already moves 100 miles per hour. He never releases him. He made it really famous. "Hound Dound Dog would become his simplest single in the US of 1960 is a complicated figure: it starred in an endless flow of cool Nstruyed around his popularity, and he recorded endless songs for those movies, but much of the material feels commercial when you listen to him.
